Student ISTSS Essay Competition – Submission Deadline: July 1, 2008

The International Society for Traumatic Stress (ISTSS) is conducting an essay competition for students. All undergraduate, graduate-level students, or post-doctoral fellows enrolled in a formal training program (part-time or full-time) at the time of submission are eligible. The first prize winner will win $1,000, the second prize winner $500, and the third prize winner $100. All first three finishers will also receive free registration to the ISTSS Annual Meeting in Chicago and money toward travel to and accommodations at the meeting.

The essay topic centers around an issue relevant to the study of traumatic stress that the writer thinks is most important for DSM-V to address. The essay will articulate why that is the most important issue, and offer suggestions for how DSM-V could improve on DSM-IV to address this issue.

All essay submissions will be judged by a panel of researchers, practitioners, and journalists. The winning essay will be reprinted in a future issue of StressPoints.

David Finkelhor, 2008

Oxford University Press, USA

248 pages

ISBN13: 9780195342857

ISBN10: 0195342852

Review

"...an important book...As in all his work, Finkelhor proceeds in a careful analytical way, sorting through explanations, advancing helpful classification systems and making good use of empirical evidence where it exists...[He is] a stimulating theorist and policy analyst. Finkelhor has challenged specialists in a way which will hopefully lead to productive and practically important scholarship." – Northwest Institute for Children and Families
