teur du département. Nous avons 2 nouveaux professeurs à engager pour juin 2016.

Mount Royal University

Dr. Jennifer Pettit, Chair of the Department at Mount Royal University (MRU), is pleased to report that the history program at MRU is thriving. In the next year the department anticipates hiring at least one tenure track position in the area of Indigenous history/ Studies. The number of history majors is holding steady and it is hoped that some changes at the university that will allocate a guaranteed number of seats will increase the number of majors. Currently demand exceeds space in the program.

Two events that are of interest are the upcoming Historians Teaching History conference and the Foothills Colloquium in Undergraduate History, both of which will be hosted by MRU in the Spring of 2016. The Historians Teaching History conference will take place on May 28, 2016 at MRU (one day prior to the start of the Canadian Historical Association Meeting at Congress). The conference builds upon the success of the teaching university history sessions hosted by MRU at Congress, 2013. The Foothills Colloquium which takes place May 2 and 3, 2016, provides a venue for undergraduate students in history from across Canada to present their research.

In addition to the two aforementioned conferences, a number of initiatives related to a new Indigenization plan for the university are underway. The Indigenization plan affects all aspects of the university, from curriculum and research to student support. Central to the plan is making connections and educating faculty and students. As a result, MRU has formed a partnership with the Iiniistsi Arts Society to host events such as Redx Talks, a speaker series that expresses and embodies Indigenous world views. MRU was also a sponsor of the documentary Elder in the Making which premiered at the 2015 Calgary International Film Festival.

Initiatives that involve experiential learning continue to flourish, including placing students in internship positions at local heritage institutions such as the Military Museums of Calgary and Heritage Park. In addition, field schools and travel study courses continue to be popular. This year historians led students on a trip to the United States for a travel study course that examined the history of slavery and civil rights. The Treaty 7 field course hosted by MRU also continues to attract a large number of students. The class collaborates with local Indigenous nations to learn about the people, history and cultures of the Treaty 7 area. Upon their return the students participate in a number of service learning activities. Next spring MRU is partnering with Wilfrid Laurier University to offer a WWI battlefield travel course. Students in the program continue to be active as well, publishing yet another volume of the Mount Royal Undergraduate Humanities Review, a peer-reviewed online journal that showcases the work of undergraduate students, and overseeing the Student Historical Society, one of the most popular student clubs on campus.
